THE Whitechurch Addiction Support Programme (WASP) in Rathfarnham has worked with over 500 families who have been affected by addiction throughout this year. Established in 1997, WASP provides a family support model for people affected by addiction and supports families from Dublin 6W, 8, 12, 14, 16, 18 and 24.

Their services include treatment interventions, signposting, family mediation, key working, addiction-related counselling and court accompaniment.

A recent addition to WASP's suite of services is a men's support group, as staff noticed a need for a group of this nature as many support groups tend to be primarily attended by women. Cathy Murray, the manager of WASP, told the support and advice they need," added Ms Cathy Murray, the manager of WASP, told The Echo: "WASP is very proud of how we have developed over the years. "We started as volunteers in the Whitechurch community in 1997. We now have six full-time workers, eight CE workers and 15 volunteers.

"One of our biggest achievements this year is our Family Support Group for Men. 'This started in September of this year, the group was very much needed and is now thriving.

"Through our experience over the years, it has been difficult for their voices to be heard as our family support groups have mainly been women. "We now see the confidence they have in their peer group." This group complements WASP's existing family support groups, which are an essential

"Families trying to cope have feelings of extreme anxiety, guilt and powerlessness - the group supports each other in realising they are not alone and feel heard and valued.

"WASP supports parents, grandparents, and guardians to help their loved ones in addiction, as we know addiction has an impact on every family member directly and indirectly.

One of the most enjoyable aspects of WASP for both staff and clients is when former clients return to share their successes and to outline how the support groups in WASP helped them and their families.

"We invite family members to come back into our family support groups and give their stories of how successful it turned out for them, and to see the faces of the members when they realise it could be their story in time," said Ms Murray.

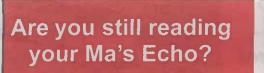

"This brings great hope and light for a future they didn't believe possible." For further information on WASP, visit the WASP Whitechurch/Rathfarnham Addiction Support Programme Facebook page. For information on other services provided by
